Third Quarter School Report Cards

It's just about that time - 3rd quarter school report cards. What does this mean for parents? This is the time they should be looking at their child's performance and stepping in if there are problems. Teachers are making decisions now about whether your child will pass or be held back another year. If your child is not keeping up, this is your last opportunity to put a plan into place for next year. Once the June report cards come out - it will be too late.

Now is the time to take action if your viewers, readers or listeners haven't already. Dr. David Lowenstein, a Columbus psychologist with over 20 years in private practice, can share what parents should do NOW to best position their child for success in next year's school year. Dr. Lowenstein will provide these tips and more:

- Meet with your child's teacher right away
- Find out why your child is having trouble - is it a learning disability or a behavior problem?
- Create an action plan to get your child on track - through tutoring or summer school or make the decision together to keep your child back another year

Dr. Lowenstein specializes in individual, marital, family and group therapy with children, adolescents and adults. Experienced, professional and humorous, Dr. Lowenstein is a terrific expert for interviews on this and many other related topics.

Dr. Lowenstein provides expert testimony nationwide relating to adolescent and adult psychopathology and is also a frequent guest on television, radio and print media.
